

Farmland Museum Sustainability Policy Statement

The Farmland Museum is committed to reducing its environmental impact year on year. We seek to continually improve the environmental performance of our activities and we are committed to reducing impacts to the environment from all areas of our operation both within the buildings and in the grounds.

We expect all staff, volunteers and partners to work in an environmentally manner.

Through the use of sustainable practice and behaviours across the organisation we are confident that we are reducing our negative impact on our environment and clearly communicating our intent to our visitors, staff, volunteers and suppliers.

Through the promotion and maintenance of the museum site we provide a resource that both preserves the collection for future generations and provides a much valued open green space in a rural setting.

We comply with all current environmental legislation and continually strive to make improvements wherever we can.

We will continually assess the environmental impact of all historic, current and likely future developments.
